

In this experiment, we discuss a type of chemical reaction (combustion reaction). Combustion reaction means the burning of substances in the presence of oxygen. For example, a match stick that has sulfur, burns in the presence of air (oxygen). However, once the air is cut off, it will no longer burn. Therefore, materials can burn only in the presence of oxygen.